Chelsea Boulton is Union County Telecommunicator of the Year

April 14, 2015, Monroe, NC – Union County Emergency Communications Telecommunicator Chelsea Boulton has received the Sandy Marsh Award as Union County Telecommunicator of the Year. The award is given in memory of former county dispatcher Sandy Marsh who lost her battle with cancer two years ago.

The Telecommunicator of the Year is determined by peer votes and the award is presented to one person who has shown commitment to Emergency Communication's mission and excellence in service throughout the year.

"Chelsea has been with the department for about a year and a half, and in that short time has proven her value and dedication to the department and her peers," said Union County Emergency Communications Operation Manager Sharon Crook.
